

Consequence wheel

Consequence wheels are a bit like concept maps. At the centre of the consequence wheel is a person involved in the accident. First order consequences are those that are a direct outcome of the accident and should be included in the first ring. Second order consequences are those that might emerge from the first order consequences and should be included in the second ring. An example has been provided to get you started.

